

When I think about humans all that comes to my mind is uniqueness, different souls each with a creative purpose and even a mindset, one of the most important and interesting creatures, with minds that could build and achieve anything with a simple idea. They are full of creativity and adventure. Humans will always impress me with the way they think, and how fast they can learn. How they tend to get happy from the smallest things in life. How they can feel such intense emotions and let it out in different ways by finding solutions to their problems, meditation, journaling, and self-care. What is more inspiring is how they have the ability to plan for the future and learn from their mistakes and outgrow them no matter how bad it gets; they still keep going. Also, humans have a strong social nature in which they can easily form a relationship, friendship from different communities that share different beliefs, cultures and traditions that is special for each one of us.
